

Make-Vince-happy project

I am a housewife. Neither My undergraduate major nor graduate major was English at all. I have never taken English language course before. I didn't have any job experience. I still don't need to earn money. However, something happened to me. It changed my life completely different and let me decide to learn teaching skills.

My first son, Vince is a kid with special needs. Since I knew that he was different, all my thinking has been about how to raise him well, how to make him happy, how to educate him. Feeling frustrated to find an appropriate tutor for him, I made up my mind to be his own teacher. I realized that I as his mother was the only person who knew all about his history and understood his state best.

Following this decision, many tasks overwhelmed me at once. For the most important thing, I should learn professional teaching skills for his academy in both Korean and English since my son is Korean-American. Teaching him is not a big burden at this stage since he is just 5 years old, yet it will be much more difficult while he is getting older. So I need to prepare and elaborate my skills.

I will be not just a teacher but a great teacher for my son. As soon as I finish this course, I'm going to look for lots of opportunities as much as possible to use skills that I would learn from the class. More experience will make my skills richer. After I become an expert to teach kids like my son, I will found a specialized school focused on the aspects of my son and other kids who have similar difficulties.

I am planning everyday. I conceive many ideas every single night. I study several things at the same time from teaching skills to special education. All these things aim one target. My son's happiness. I will be his best teacher for the rest of my life. I will build the best school for him. Learning teaching skills in this class is the very first step to reach my goal.
