

There are two types of teaching. One is traditional and the other is modern.

I am going to tell you about two types in my language learning experience. When i was a middle school and high school student, my teacher completely based on textbook and one way communication like traditional classrooms.

It is absolutely true that i usually have listened from the teachers in my classroom, when i was a middle school and high school student. It was not unhelpful in learning language. I can listen but i couldn't speak well and i didn't know about how to speak well and how to express about my ideas and opinions. I was not interested in study languages but i was accustomed to traditional teaching. For instance, I didn't know well about my lessons but most teachers prepared about their subjects. They knew it more than me. The teacher wanted to let me know her teaching style, skills and knowledges. but It was not the best teacher i've ever had.

Because she relied on explaining or lecturing as a way of conveying information to me. Her lessons could be interesting and informative but i was just listening. There were no chance to speak in my classroom. She is an authoritative figure.

I thought that i want to change her teaching style. Of course the learning has to be done by my own personal effect, but i think that it is important how to guide for me to learning English.

The other is about modern teaching. I am major in English. English is a common language. I thought that i would get a wide and very broadly chances in the future jobs at that times. I was interested in English language for 4 years at my university. I think that i met a good teacher in my class. He is a foreigner teacher. He was an interactive person and an enabler i think. I liked his class style because he prepared a variety of materials including textbooks. He acted more friendly like a guide or a counsellor. When i didn't understand something about English languages, he was talking about that nicely to help me for my understanding.

He was not going too fast for me or all his students. My memories of his lessons were of what i did, rather than what he did, of my learning rather than his teaching. We had a test. The test is a very important thing for me but we are not focused on our test. We thought communication is more important in each other like productive skills. We needed to talk to each other more in our class. I was felt fun in English learning. I think he was a modern style teacher.

He was enthusiastic and he was really listened to his students. It was helpful for me during my class. I got scholarships for 4 years. For the first time in my life, i felt it like learning English is interesting, i thought. After graduation, I stopped it about learning English. I forgot it about English language skills. I think Persistence is the important in all languages.

In conclusion, it is known to be true that modern classrooms are very helpful to all students in these days. And communicative teaching is based on beliefs that learners will learn the best if they participate in meaningful communication. The students will learn by communicating.

It will be able to practise speaking usefully and this is focusing much more on what the students do. The students will organise so that they can do the activity. This may involve making pairs or groups, moving the seating. And a demonstration or example is usually more effective than a long explanation. It is usually important to have some kind of feedback each other in our classroom on the activity. Maybe we will have work hard on the task, and it will have probably raise a plenty of ideas, comments and questions about English language.

When one student know something that another student doesn't, there is a reason for talking. So, the communication like a modern teaching is a very important in our class and us. I usually learned it from that style in these days.

The main point is that the first, an effective teacher have to listen to their students, the second, they need to have communicative language teaching skills and enthusiastic.
